Local woman turning 105, community asked to send cards

Rebecca Stalnaker

HINTON (Hinton News) - A Summers County woman, Myrtle Brabb, is turning 105 on July 4. Hinton Hope Foundation recently placed a request via Facebook asking community members to send her birthday cards. She currently resides at Main Street Care in Hinton.

Brabb is a lifelong resident of Summers County and will be celebrating an incredible milestone on her upcoming birthday. After beating COVID-19 twice in 2020, Brabb is turning 105 years old on July 4. According to her niece, Juanita Brooks, she has always loved to cook and bake. Some of her favorite things to bake were pies and applesauce cakes to give people at Christmas time.

Additionally, Brabb loved birds and cared for several throughout the years. She taught them to say phrases such as "Give me a kiss" and "Pete's a pretty boy." Her niece noted that spending time talking to birds was the highlight of her day, and she often spent hours with them.

Brabb attended River-view Chaple and loved working in her garden. According to Brooks, she never had any major health problems.

Brooks moved to Summers County in 2004 to care for Brabb. She said, "She was like a mother to me."

An invitation has been sent to West Virginia Governor Justice to help celebrate Brabb's birthday. There has been no confirmation at the time of writing.

In their post requesting cards for Brabb, Hinton Hope Foundation refers to her as a "treasure." If you would like to help Brabb celebrate this momentous birthday, mail her a birthday card addressed to Myrtle Brabb, Main Street Care, PO Box 7, Hinton, WV 25951.

Concord University receives $240,000 grant from Benedum Foundation to support underrepresented students ATHENS, W.Va. (Hinton News) - The Concord Research & Development Corporation at Concord University has received a grant from the Benedum Foundation, $240,000 over the next two years.

Funding from this grant will support the creation of CU-ASPIRE (Concord University - Achieving a Sense of Belonging, Persistence, Retention, and Equity). The overarching goal of the program is to increase persistence to graduation for traditionally underrepresented students—underrepresented minorities, low-income, or first-generation—from Benedum's service area of West Virginia and southwestern Pennsylvania.

"We're especially grateful to the Benedum Foundation for this funding, which will allow Concord to continue our commitment to providing access and support to students who might not always consider college as a feasible option," said Dr. Sarah

Beasley, vice president of student affairs and dean of students.

The project will employ research- and evidence-based practices that are intentionally scaffolded throughout the first two years of students' academic careers to increase their sense of belonging; promote an inclusive, culturally responsive environment; and provide the academic, social, and career support necessary to persist at Concord.

"The transition from high school to college can be very overwhelming," said Anna Hardy, assistant dean of students and director of housing and residence life. "The CU-ASPIRE program will offer students the opportunity to gain the knowledge and confidence needed to help make the transition easier for them. I look forward to assisting with getting the program off the ground and seeing it in action!"

The funding will also allow the university to expand the CU Fresh Start summer bridge program for incoming freshmen into a 10-day residential program. This program allows students to get a head start on their college education and become comfortable on Concord's campus before starting their first year.

"I'm excited for the CU-ASPIRE program to expand on our CU Fresh Start summer bridge program, from which we've already seen great results," said Dr. Sheila Womack, director of student success. "Providing quality education to students from all backgrounds is central to Concord's mission, and this generous grant from the Benedum Foundation will help us support the students who need it the most while they earn their degrees."

CU-ASPIRE will also connect participants to already existing campus resources such as Student Support Services (SSS) and the Center for Academic and Career Development (CACD).

A peek into Summers County's past: Pence Springs schools

and William Jones

PENCE SPRINGS (Hinton News) - It is time for another edition of A Peek into Summers County's Past. Every week, a local history collector, William Jones, shares a piece from his vast collection. He provides information and photos of the topic. Most of the items are directly connected to the county's history, while some are only tangentially connected. This week we travel to the Pence Springs area to discuss local schools.

Jones began by talking about some of the schools to serve the area. He said, "Pence Springs has an extensive history in regards to schools. To begin, the first school in this area was the Mays School. The second to be established was the Buffalo [Lick] School. Also, there was a school near Lowell called Kellan School. All three schools were the standard one-room schoolhouse for the general public. They were all consolidated into one school called Pence Springs School around 1900. One of the three schools mentioned is still standing, the Buffalo School house. It was renovated in 2008 to serve as a camp. During the renovation I acquired the original 1800s wooden shutters that had been removed from the building and stored in a crawl space under it."

The original Pence Springs Hotel buildings have served many purposes throughout the years. According to Jones, "Sometime in the 1930s Eleanor Roosevelt had her hands in briefly converting what had previously been the Pence Springs Hotel into a finishing preparatory school for young girls. This all took place around the same time as The Great Depression and her husband President Roosevelt's 'New Deal' that had been established to improve the lives of people suffering due to hardships at that time."

"The building then became a state prison for women. It was restored and operated as a hotel again by Ashby Berkley from the 1980s to the 2000s, my mother was one of his chefs for over a decade. Then, in turning full circle it became the therapeutic private school called Greenbrier Academy For Girls until March of this year. In between all of this the county built what was known just as the Pence Springs School, that I previously mentioned. It housed everything up to the 8th grade. The children went to Talcott from their 9th grade year until they graduated."

Speaking specifically on the topic of the Pence Springs School, Jones said, "The original Pence Springs School had only four rooms, where multiple grades shared a room. Early one morning in 1941 it caught fire and was totally destroyed. It was located along Route 3 at the corner of the road that goes across the Pence Springs bridge. The county had to act fast to find a suitable location to hold school while the destroyed building was cleaned up and a new modern brick building was built in the same location. It is currently still standing. After some indepth research it was determined that classes would be held at the Lahey Boarding House on the other side of the river due to the close proximity of most of the students that lived in Pence Springs proper. So the students up to the 8th grade went to school in the boarding house while the new building was being built."

Talking about his personal connections to the items displayed in the photos, Jones stated, "I recall visiting Alvin Garten and his family in the evenings for many years before he passed away in 2013. He too, was passionate about history, especially of Pence Springs. He told me about the school burning down when he was in the 3rd grade, and how school was held in the parlor at the Lahey Boarding House for a year until the new brick school was finished. He had this old original photograph of the school that I copied during one of our many chats about the history of Pence Springs."

Going into more detail, Jones noted, "This table is the only known piece that survived when the Lahey Boarding House met the same fate as the Pence Springs school house and burned down later in the 1940s. Suzanne Tolley Humphrey, my neighbor and close friend gave me this cherry country Sheraton table that is from the Civil War era that came from the Lahey Boarding House not too long before she passed. She knew I was as obsessed and cared for our history as much as she did and it would be well taken care of. Suzannes mother Margaret Tolley, was raised by Dennis and Francis Lahey after Margarets mother died during the Spanish Flu Pandemic of 1918. Dennis and Francis were the owners and operators of the boarding house."

In conclusion, Jones said, "Suzanne's family originally moved from Virginia to Pence Springs in the 1880s. It can be assumed that this Cherry country Sheraton table from the Civil War era that came from the Lahey Boarding House. Photo provided by William Jones.

Civil War-era cherry country Sheraton table came with them when they relocated to Pence Springs. It must have been very special to the family as it was carried out of the house while it was burning. The concrete steps to the front porch are still in the yard of the house to the right of the bridge in Pence Springs. I also have two of the early original desks from the school that had been replaced before it burned with the more modern classroom desks at the time that I purchased at an auction Ashby had in Pence Springs around 2010."

With that, we have come to the end of another edition of A Peek into Summers County's Past. Did you know about all of these schools in the Pence Springs area? Be sure to come back next week for another glimpse into the county's rich history.

Ascend West Virginia opens applications for New River Gorge area

NEW RIVER GORGE, W.Va. (Hinton News) - Ascend West Virginia, the nation's premier talent attraction and retention program, today (June 20) announced its addition of the New River Gorge community to the program.

Founded by West Virginia native Brad D. Smith and his wife Alys, Ascend WV will welcome a new group of adventurers to the state's New River Gorge region, home to the country's newest national park, offering them more than $20,000 in incentives — and a path to making "Almost Heaven" home. New River Gorge joins a lineup of other communities that have welcomed nearly 300 new West Virginians while maintaining a 98% retention rate.

"Opening a new regional community is another great milestone for this program," said Brad D. Smith, co-founder of the Wing 2 Wing Foundation and president of Marshall University. "We have established four thriving locations, all of which continue to welcome new talent to our home among the hills, and the applications haven't stopped pouring in since Ascend WV launched. We are excited to welcome this talented group of Ascenders as they join our growing family of new West Virginians who have found their next home in the Mountain State. It's incredible to see the momentum continue to grow around this program and our great state."

Beginning today (June 20), applications are being accepted for the New River Gorge community, in addition to the other four communities previously announced. The area is known for the nation's newest national park, world class outdoor recreation, untouched natural beauty, rich history and small-town charm. This community, on the rim of the New River Gorge National Park and Preserve, makes a perfect home base for adventures in the nearby park.

"Community, purpose and the outdoors are the three core principles of this program," said Alys Smith, co-founder of the Wing 2 Wing Foundation. "The Ascenders who have already made the move to West Virginia are truly planting their roots here and making a difference. We could not be more thrilled to open up West Virginia to more remote workers and look forward to welcoming them to our state's renowned New River Gorge area." Leading remote worker program offers $12,000 cash and year of free outdoor recreation

The Ascend WV program was made possible by a $25 million gift to the West Virginia University Brad and Alys Smith Outdoor Economic Development Collaborative from former Intuit executive chairman and current Marshall University President Brad D. Smith and his wife, Alys. Together with Governor Justice and his departments of Tourism and Economic Development, the collective team developed the only program in the country that focuses on outdoor recreation opportunities for talent attraction and retention.

"I have long believed that when we look beyond our state's challenges, we can find opportunities to ignite our economy, develop world-class recreational infrastructure and expand outdoor educational programs," WVU President Gordon Gee said. "The Ascend West Virginia program enables us to advance our state's assets, rather than dwelling on our obstacles. And through this program, we are embracing innovation and engaging with those whose eyes are cast to the future." To help participants experience West Virginia's extraordinary landscapes, roaring rivers and vibrant small towns, the program includes these incentives:

Cash — $12,000 cash relocation incentive, paid in installments over a two-year period.

Free Outdoor Recreation — One year of free outdoor recreation valued at more than $2,500. The package encourages a healthy work-life balance filled with hiking, ATV riding, ziplining, rafting, rock climbing, golfing, skiing and more.

Free Coworking Space — Remote workers will have modern facilities to stay connected and access to more than $1,200 in free outdoor gear rentals.

Professional Advancement — The ability to earn remote work certifications through West Virginia University and access to the WVU John Chambers College of Business and Economics entrepreneurship ecosystem.

Outdoor and Social Programming — Opportunity to participate in curated outdoor recreation excursions and social activities.

The program will welcome more than 1,000 remote workers to the state over the next six years. Applications now open for all five program areas

Beginning today (June 20), Ascend West Virginia is accepting applications for New River Gorge, Greater Elkins, Morgantown Area, Eastern Panhandle and Greenbrier Valley.

"The growth of this program is a testament to the increased interest and positive buzz around West Virginia," said Chelsea Ruby, cabinet secretary of the West Virginia Department of Tourism. "The residents of our mountain towns are some of the most warm and welcoming people you'll find anywhere in the nation. They're eagerly awaiting these new folks to move in. We encourage remote workers across the nation to find the vibrant community that fits their needs and apply for a chance to join the fun and talented Ascend members who have already made West Virginia home."

The Ascend WV program spans four regions of the state, each of which offer a unique setting to appeal to remote workers:

Greenbrier Valley
Laid-back living along the idyllic Greenbrier River—and home to 203 mountain bike trails, 2,325 climbing routes, 138 paddling runs, and a booming arts scene.

Morgantown Area

Greater Elkins

tains, world-class fishing, the Monongahela National Forest and more.

tain bike trails, 1693 climbing routes and 111 paddling runs on the New and Gauley Rivers. This booming area was rated one of the coolest small towns in America because of its array of local restaurants, scenic surrounding mountains and recreational activities.

Rocket scientist credits 4-H in discovering her lifelong passion

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (Hinton News) - A lifelong 4-H'er, Shannon Adams, credits West Virginia University Extension's 4-H program with helping her discover her dream career and teaching her the skills it took to get there.

Adams is a graduate of the Benjamin M. Statler College of Engineering and Mineral Resources with a dual bachelor's degree in mechanical and aerospace engineering and a master's degree in aerospace engineering, but her interest in rocketry started long before that at a 4-H club when she was only nine years old.

Adams was introduced to 4-H by a family friend who was a 4-H leader and suggested that she join her local club. She attended her first 4-H club meeting, and the rest is history.

"The first time I attended county camp was when I was nine years old, and I loved it because I enjoyed spending time outdoors and with my friends," Adams said. "There were STEM activities at camp, and I participated in bottle rockets. I ended up going to the national rocketry competition through the 4-H program, which sparked my interest in becoming an engineer."

Adams is now a propulsion engineer and the head of research and development in the technology development department at Allegany Ballistics Laboratory, operated by Northrop Grumman in Mineral County. She teaches STEM classes for her local West Virginia 4-H program in Mineral County, where she works with rocketry projects, such as building air-powered rockets, bottle rockets and model rockets. Adams ensures that the kids get the opportunity to build rockets in an easy and safe way.

Throughout her life, Adams has served in various roles for 4-H. While in college, she was a 4-H Extension camping instructor and the WVU Collegiate 4-H club president, where she coordinated the National Collegiate 4-H Conference. She has completed the 4-H Charting program, is a 4-H All Star, 4-H camp counselor and helps coordinate the Cloverbuds day camp in Mineral County.

Adams recently became a 4-H club organizational leader for the club in Mineral County. After the previous leader left, she wanted all the youth in the county to have the opportunity to experience a 4-H club.

"Shannon is one of those volunteers that you can trust to fully manage and take care of a program," Margaret Miltenberger, WVU Extension 4-H youth development agent in Mineral County, said. "We need more mid-level 4-H volunteers because they are the ones who can really make a difference with expanding the program to reach more youths and provide quality programs."

I have a nine-year-old daughter and a seven-year-old son involved in 4-H, and I want them to love 4-H from a young age and have the same experience I had because I know the positive long-term effect the program can have on you, Adams said. I have already seen the growth and impact 4-H has had on both of my kids. For example, now they are comfortable with public speaking, when before they were too shy to do that. I want to make sure my kids and all the kids in the county can have that experience and opportunity to grow.

The 4-H program gives youths the opportunity to learn a variety of topics and skills. Adams credits 4-H for teaching her skills that she has been able to use throughout her life and career, including public speaking, leadership skills and goal planning.

"4-H has positively affected me because it is how I chose my dream career and where I learned valuable skills that have helped me to be more successful," Adams said. "4-H was a place where I could intentionally learn those skills and practice them in a safe environment before I applied them in bigger settings."

Throughout her life, Adams remained involved in the 4-H program because it gave her the opportunity to hold leadership roles, accomplish tasks – whether it was a service project or a fun event – and leave a positive impact on youth in the program the same way 4-H benefitted her.

"My daughter is always asking me if her friends can come to a 4-H event, so I am constantly reaching out to parents telling them that 4-H is a way for their kids to create fun memories that they will have forever," Adams said. "4-H is a good opportunity to start a journey of branching out little by little and leading to bigger and bigger things."

Mon Power given lead role in pole usage

CHARLESTON (Hinton News) - To streamline the review process for line attachments involving jointly owned communication line poles, state regulators issued an order designating Monongahela Power Company as the focal point of contact.

The case's significance is highlighted by the fact that telecommunications carriers are currently applying for pole attachments as part of a massive deployment of broadband communications services in West Virginia.

The staff of the Public Service Commission of West Virginia filed a petition in May to simplify the application process in a case that involved Monongahela

Power, The Potomac Edison Company and Frontier West Virginia, Inc. Both Mon Power and Frontier had been accepting and dealing with the carrier applications and fees in the case of their jointly owned poles.

Since Mon Power has specialized software, the Public Service Commission designated it as the point of contract. Mon Power will issue or deny permits. It will solely charge fees, perform billing services, and distribute payments. It will perform required engineering work.

Both Mon Power and Frontier, however, will invoice applicants for work each must perform - called "make ready" in the order - to accommodate third-party attachments on the poles.

The commission said it had hoped that the effect of its acceptance of the joint agreement by the parties involved would have resulted in one stop shopping for applicants, but "the parties have agreed that Frontier must be responsible for make-ready in the telecommunications space."

The parties involved in the case reached general agreement, which was embodied in a joint stipulation filed with the commission on June 9.

More information on this case can be found on the PSC website: www.psc.state.wv.us. Click on "Case Information" and access Case No. 22-0885-T-E-SC.

Beginning with this issue, we will be looking at the Suffering Servant, Jesus Christ.

The Suffering Servant (Part 1)

Section A

by David Padfield

The 53rd chapter of Isaiah has often been called the "Suffering Servant" passage. It is the fourth in a series of passages dealing with "the Servant" or "the Servant of the Lord." The gospel writers identify Jesus of Nazareth as fulfilling these verses. From these passages in Isaiah we are given a view of His life and character in the days of His flesh, His tenderness as well as His power, and the great deliverance He would bring, not only for the Jews, but for all the world.

Isaiah began his ministry about 740 B.C. and ended in 680 B.C. God, through Isaiah, gives us a clear picture of what was to happen, not only in the immediate future for Israel, but how He was going to bring the Messiah, His "Suffering Servant," into the world and allow Him to be sacrificed for the sins of the world.

Chapters 40 through 66 of Isaiah discuss the Babylonian captivity and the reasons for it, and finally the restoration from it. However, there was going to be a greater deliverance than that from Babylon, and there would be a greater "messiah" than Cyrus, the king of Persia.

Isaiah 53 is one of the best-loved passages of Scripture. It was this very passage that caused the Ethiopian to inquire of Philip, "of whom does the prophet say this, of himself or of some other man?" (Acts 8:34). Philip began at Isaiah 53 and "preached Jesus to him" (Acts 8:35).

We need to point out that the Suffering Servant of Isaiah 53 is introduced earlier in the book of Isaiah, and is mentioned in four separate sections of the book. In this article, we will examine all four sections of Isaiah which deal with the Suffering Servant.

The Servant Has A Mission

"Behold! My Servant whom I uphold, My Elect One in whom My soul delights! I have put My Spirit upon Him; He will bring forth justice to the Gentiles. He will not cry out, nor raise His voice, nor cause His voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed He will not break, and smoking flax He will not quench; He will bring forth justice for truth. He will not fail nor be discouraged, Till He has established justice in the earth; and the coastlands shall wait for His law." (Isa. 42:1-4).

Who is it that God upholds, chooses, delights in and gives His Spirit to? A servant! God rejects tyrants and overlords and chooses a servant! When the Pharisees took counsel against Jesus in order to destroy him, the multitudes followed our Lord and He healed them. Matthew directly applied these verses to Christ, saying the healings were performed "that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Isaiah the prophet" (Matt. 12:15-21).

We notice in Isaiah 42:1 that the Servant was to be chosen by God—not just anyone could perform this task. God would delight in this One. We recall the words of the Father at the baptism of Jesus, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17). Again, at the transfiguration of Jesus, we hear the Father say, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear Him!" (Matt. 17:5).
